

A LESSON FROM DR. SEUSS

I'm sure that you have heard of Dr. Seuss and his rhyming words of wisdom. I have recently come across one of his sayings that I would like to share with you.

“You have brains in your head.
You have feet in your shoes.
You can steer yourself in any direction you choose.
You're on your own, and you know what you know.
You are the guy who'll [choose] where to go.”

BUT

The brain needs a plan, direction, and action. It can't do it on its own.
The feet in your shoes need you to point them in a specific direction.
You need to know where you are going and keep focus on it.

BECAUSE

If you have not decided where you are going, and how you are going to get there, someone else will inevitably make the decision for you, and you may not want to go where you end up!
